Architecture as heritage, conservation and history

By Magnus Rönn

Cultural heritage can be seen as significant recourses for future architectural design and a value in need of protection when urban and rural areas are transformed. In this context, compensation is a concept covering adjustment and restores.

This seminar is oriented towards professional practice conducted by architects and urban planners, architectural conservators/restorers and archaeologists. We invite scholars to discuss (1) tools, approaches and measures to compensate damage by exploitation of areas with cultural heritage, (2) reconstruction and design solutions for taking care of and developing cultural values and qualities in architecture in relation to the exploitation of sites.

Magnus Rönn will present preliminary findings from an on-going research project studying the use of compensation in detailed planning in area with protected cultural values. He has investigated how the town planning office in Gothenburg make exploitation possible by approaches working as compensation intensions.
